What's wrong with this schedule?

There are two things members have brought up:

- The first is 7 in a row is just too long to be working without a break.
- The second is no one asks you to do seven in a row, the schedule is just given to you and you are expected to do it.

We think the company should be asking you if you want to do more than 6 in a row.

We know in the breaks you are busy bringing books to the staff room, getting material ready for the next class and/or answering questions from staff. 7 or more units in a row is just too long.

That's why we asked MGT to put back the clause about prior agreement before giving a teacher "7 in a row." Units include lessons, travels, methods, assessments and offices.

(Travels at the beginning or end cannot be avoided, but middle ones can.)

After all, part of teacher quality is being able to perform - and you can't do that when you are dead tired or starving.

Begunto is the Berlitz General Union Tokyo. We are committed to maintaining and improving conditions in the work place. We need your help doing just that.
